The theme of this year's congress is Behavioral Public Finance, which is focused on the implications of non-standard decision making for the design of public policies. Behavioral Public Finance combines behavioral economics and public economics to extend the welfare economics framework to allow more robust evaluations of real-world policies. Such an extension can include new and innovative policy tools as well as frameworks to explain why consumers' responses to policy incentives are sometimes anomalous. Many important public policies are designed because people do not always choose what is best for them and that consumer behavior has a lot of determinants beyond traditional prices, such as norms, framing, emotions, and fairness concerns.

The 2023 Congress would like to highlight these behavioral public finance frameworks in many domains, such as taxation, regulation, and nudges.

The papers to be presented at the IIPF Congress will be selected by the Scientific Committee. Only completed papers in PDF format will be considered. Non-IIPF-members must pay a submission fee of €20.

Acceptance decisions will be communicated in April. Authors of accepted papers are required to become members of the IIPF and to confirm their presentation by registering in June 2023. Payment of the annual IIPF membership fee also ensures a reduced registration rate. For more information about IIPF membership please visit www.iipf.org/mbshp.

Selected papers from the 2023 IIPF Congress will be published in a special issue of International Tax and Public Finance. To be considered for publication in this issue, papers must be submitted to the journal by September 15, 2023.

Authors who wish to be considered for the IIPF Young Economists Award, the IIPF Peggy and Richard Musgrave Prize (both for authors under 40 years), or the International Tax and Public Finance PhD Student Prize should indicate this when submitting papers for presentation. More information on the awards is available at www.iipf.org/awards.
